

The FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections. I have been working at home on a PhD and have had much more peace since we have been on the no-call list. Our dinner hour is no longer interrupted by strangers calling and wanting to sell us something. As a consumer paying for the phone line to my home I should have the right to control who has access to that phone. The service is being purchased for my convenience, not that of companies hoping to sell something. I never buy anything from anyone over the phone, so it is a waste of their time and money for them to be able to call me.
